SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Where Dreams Are Sold. At a shop that is never old. a twilight silence lingers, there that dreams are sold.

There's the scent of Love's lest roses, The soft echo of childhood's laugh. There's the ring of empty glasses, For the white lips never quaff.

To the crimson sign of the Poppy We all come when the daylight dies, When the curfew music quivers 'Neath the gray of evening skies.

Just beyond the gates of sunset,
Where the grim toll of death we pay,
We shall find the shop of dream-wares,
Where the popies hang alway.

Be, we long for dusk of the twilight,
When, with wealth of no earthly gold,
We shall come where sleep-flowers cluster,

To the shop where dreams are sold.

dence, R. 1.

Every moment of the two weeks was filled with something to render the measure of enjoyment full to overflow-measure of enjoyment and the many sing.

Trips were taken to Afton, Mountain Trop, Monticello, the Miller School and other interesting points. The party had the pleasure of a visit to the hospitable fitme of Mrs. Annie Payne at Crozet. Two days were spent at the dorse Show. When the time came for parting, goodbyes were reluctantly said, and many expressions of appreciation over the charming manner in which Mrs. Carroll had provided for the happiness of her house party were spoken. Miss Diggs and Mrs. Kudd declared that they had never had a pleasanter time, or one to which they could refer with a greater feeling of pleasure.

Both expressed themselves satisfied with each other, and the prospective groom secured the license and a minister was called to perform the nuptials. Scanning the license the minister discovered the prospective groom had been divorced in his Western State. He was questioned and the minister refused to tie the knot. Every minister in the town was solicited to refuse to officiate, and this afternoon the couple came to Lynchburg. After looking around a short while, they were married as indicated. The bride owns a splendid farm near the Appomattox battlefield and the couple will probably reside on it. Both expressed themselves satisfied

Ance.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

NORFOLK, VA., August 7.—W. MoDowell Killough came here Thursday, His body was shipped to Charlotte. N. C., for burial to-day. He was twenty years o'd, and the son of William Killough, the engineer of the waterworks. He came here to enter the office of the architects, Hreeso & Mitchell, and his life was full of promise. His heart was full of joy.
He went to Virginia Beach yesterday, and was in bathing at 5 o'clock in the afterroon when he sank without warning, and his body did not return for forty-five minutes, when the tide washed it ashore lifeless. Efforts to restore life failed and the body was sent here, embalmed, and then sent to the family home at Charlotte.
Several persons made efforts to find the body at the place where the spectators on the beach said it disappeared, and these anxious and brave efforts nearly caused two more fatalities.
William Stevenson's body was recovered by William Callahan of Baltimore, and he was carried ashore to be revived in an unconscious condition from his efforts ir find the body of Killough. When this vas done, William Callahan was exhaust-
